

Herbrandston – a small nucleated village set within undulating landform overlooking part of Milford Haven to the south. The old village dates from the time of the Norman Conquest and has a massive low stone-built church tower at its centre. A cluster of houses, farms and a small green characterise the core of the village, but modern developments to the north and west are visually incongruous. The village lies wholly within the Milford Haven Waterway Registered Landscape of Outstanding Historic Interest in Wales. The wider landscape character is dominated by the presence of the nearby oil refinery and the Liquefied Natural Gas terminal

Herbrandston

Herbrandston from the north east of the village

Soft continuous well-defined edge to the main body of the village formed by dense woodland cover, and an outlying farmstead to the east

North eastern edge from LNG Terminal Road

Potential small residential site along the south-eastern edge of the village could be developed to round-off the settlement without detriment to the sense of place

Development Opportunities	Two sites - one at the south eastern edge of the village, demarcated by riparian vegetation in slightly concave landform along a stream course, separated from the LNG terminal access road by a field. There is an opportunity here for rounding-off the edge of the settlement with a small scale residential development up to a maximum of 25 units. Another smaller site abuts the south-western edge of the village, enclosed by existing development on three sides and with the remaining open side having the benefit of screening by a low ridge of rising landform to the west, preventing views in from that direction. This could accommodate up to a maximum of 10 units
Development Constraints	An important low ridge of ground screens views of the western parts of the village from the open areas of the National Park lying to the west. Any development to the north-west and north of the village would be likely to be unacceptably visually intrusive. The village lies within the Milford Haven Waterway area, included on the Register of Landscapes of Outstanding Historic Interest in Wales
